LBUSD's first-ever student board member shows it's okay to stay in your shell

Frانيا Lopez is using her quiet confidence to make a difference for Long Beach students

Briana Mendez-Padilla

Education Reporter

When Frania Lopez realized she would have to interview in person to be Long Beach Unified School District's first-ever student board member, her anxiety almost stopped her from applying. Lopez, a senior at Jordan High School, now provides valuable insights twice a month at board meetings and impacts public district policy.

Lopez doesn't like when people tell her she needs to get out of her shell. The way she sees it, her shell is a part of her, but that doesn't mean it should limit her. She began her term on March 2 after being chosen out of a group of 20 other applicants, and will sit on the board until June when she graduates from high school.

"I'm going to have the shortest term [of the board members] so I'm going to try to take as much advantage of this opportunity as I can," Lopez said.

She joined the Long Beach school district five years ago after facing many struggles at her schools in Los Angeles which impacted her mental health. Lopez decided to apply for the position to help other students who may be struggling with becoming comfortable in their own shells.

LBUSD passed a policy in September 2022 to create a more permanent bureaucratic role for students by appointing a seated student board member. The district has historically invited students to board meetings to update them on the activities and accomplishments of their respective schools.

The student would typically stay only for the first portion of the meeting and then be free to leave. Lopez's role is much more involved, as she attends the entirety of the meeting and can cast a "preferential vote" to share her thoughts on an item, although it does not count towards the official vote by the board.

During her time as a board member, Lopez has spoken out about the importance of mental

Long Beach studies impact of moving away from crude oil and gas production

People walk out onto the Huntington Beach Pier days after an estimated 126,000 gallons of crude oil leaked from an underwater pipeline on Oct. 4, 2021.

As California plans to phase out oil extraction and reliance state-wide by 2045, Long Beach is beginning to study how this will impact its local economy.

Long Beach City Council appointed its City Auditor to conduct a feasibility report on the liabilities and economic impacts of moving away from crude oil and natural gas production. The audit will cost $60,000 and be funded by the City Auditor's Department and the City's General Funds.

The audit will take about six months to complete, the City Auditor's office told the

Signal Tribune.

The audit will include:

- A list of oil operators in the city
- Recent and projected city revenues from: Tidelands operations, Uplands operations, royalties from private and public operators, oil barrel taxes, property taxes and utility users taxes
- Projected Asset Retirement Obligations (AROs) for oil well and facility abandonment costs and environmental cleanup costs
- AROs for orphan wells (not owned by the city or an independent source)
- The projected cost of maintaining post-production retention wells and the THUMS drilling islands
- List of programs funded by oil revenues, and the fiscal impacts of the loss of these revenues

In 2021, California Governor Gavin Newsom asked the California Air Resources Board to analyze pathways to “phase out oil extraction” state-wide by 2045 to achieve “economy-wide carbon neutrality.”

Long Beach has set a goal of reducing greenhouse gas (GHG) emissions by 40%, roughly 192,659 metric tons of carbon dioxide by 2035, according to the Long Beach Climate Action Plan (CAP) passed in August 2022. The CAP has a goal of carbon-neutrality by 2045 to fall in line with the state’s mandates.

Carbon neutrality is achieved when there is a net zero result of carbon dioxide being created versus being absorbed by trees, soil, the ocean and other “carbon sinks.” Long Beach plans to reduce its GHG emissions by 80%, or roughly 385,318 metric tons by 2050, according to the CAP.

Last year Long Beach received $12 million in oil revenues to fund city programs, though the revenues from oil have been steadily declining. Due to the cost of removing oil facilities, and the declining oil revenues, Long Beach is expected to see a decline in oil revenues by 9-10% each year until 2035.

The City Council passed an ordinance in April to decrease the sales tax of recreational marijuana in hopes of increasing that revenue stream, which contributed more than oil revenues towards the general fund at $13 million.

The Grow Long Beach Initiative has laid out plans to find revenue sources from other sectors in the city, as oil revenues continue to decrease.

Long Beach has the third largest oil field in the United States with the Wilmington Oil Field. The 13-mile long field has had two and a half billion barrels of oil extracted from its 6,150 oil wells since its founding in 1932. The Wilmington Oil Field includes the tidelands and uplands properties.

Today, the oil field produces about 46,000 barrels a day from 1,550 active wells, according to the city’s website.

Signal Hill’s main oil operations come from 400 wells, but produce over 1 million barrels of oil each year, according to Signal Hill Petroleum.

In 1964, Long Beach created four oil islands (Grissom, White, Chaffee and Freeman) in the Pacific Ocean to continue operations while keeping drilling equipment and storage away from its shores, according to the Historical Society of Long Beach. Part of the audit will explore the cost of maintaining these islands.

“Oil has been part of Long Beach’s DNA for over 100 years ... we need a plan to adjust for the decades to come,” said Councilmember Al Austin.

The audit will be sent to the Climate, Environment and Coastal Protection Committee before returning to the City Council.

INFRASTRUCTURE

Signal Hill to update landscape and hardscape of street medians

Kristen Farrah Naeem

Staff Writer

The City of Signal Hill will be redesigning its street medians in the coming years, replacing hardscaping and landscaping to improve aesthetics and water-efficiency.

In June 2022, the Street Median Project was included in the biannual 2022-2024 fiscal year budget. The Signal Tribune called Public Works Director Thomas Bekele thrice to ask how much money the City had allocated for the project, but did not receive a reply by print time on Wednesday, May 24.

City staff said the Street Median Project will be completed in phases over multiple years, but did not specify how many years.

In January, the City of Signal Hill entered into a contract with SWA Group, a landscape architecture firm, to conduct public outreach and come up with designs for the medians.

The 45 street medians in Signal Hill were divided into the following five categories:

- Type A - Small medians on small streets with one to two palm trees and City of Signal Hill signs, placed at entrances to the city.
- Type B - Medium to large medians with narrow sides and a wider area for plants in the center. These medians are mostly found along Willow Street and Cherry Avenue.
- Type C - Medium-sized medians that are wide and usually have trees.
- Type D - Narrow medians with minimal or no plants.
- Type E - Small medians with no vegetation, often at a crosswalk.

City staff said it may not be feasible to add irrigation or plants to Type E medians, but their surface may be refreshed.

Jeremy Klemic of SWA Group explained the changes that would be made to the medians during the city council meeting on May 23, which include the following:

Richard H. Grant | Signal Tribune

The intersection at Willow Street and Cherry Avenue, as seen from above on Sept. 14, 2021.

- Replacing “riprap” hardscaping—rounded stones on the ground surface—with different types of hardscape or plants. The large stones on the ground currently pose a potential safety hazard to city maintenance workers, who might trip on them.

- Replacing the brick edging of some medians with different hardscapes or plants. The brick edging is currently in poor condition.

- The addition or replacement of “understory planting,” low-lying foliage like bushes, to medians that currently don’t have any or have plants in poor condition.

- Evaluating trees for health, and replacing those in poor condition.

- Replacing damaged and faded signage.

SWA Group held an event at the Signal Hill Public Library in April and created an online survey to gauge what plants residents prefer to see in the medians. Around 40 people showed up to the event at the library, and around 30 people took the online survey, Klemic said.

The most common tree species currently found in street medians in Signal Hill is Liquidambar, a deciduous tree native to parts of the U.S. South, Midwest and Latin America.

The four tree species that received the most votes from residents were the Crepe Myrtle, Santa Cruz Ironwood, Marina Madrone and Red Push Pistache. All four trees are appropriate for the local climate, according to the University of California Agriculture and Natural Resources.

The public was also asked about what type of understory planting they wanted for the street medians, and were given the environments the plants come from rather than the specific names of the plants. The four most popular plant palettes residents voted for were Colorful Native, Coastal Sage Garden, Arroyo Meadow and California Water Wise.

Klemic said that based on the data gathered, it appeared that residents gravitated towards colorful, native, climate-ready and low-water plants. Residents also seemed to have a preference for trees that serve as habitats for native animals.

Residents kicked off Pride Month at Bixby Park near Broadway and Cherry Avenue as it was transformed into the "Proud Hub" for the Long Beach Proud Fest. The festival began in 2020 and celebrates LGBTQ culture before Pride Month officially begins in June.

Before the event began, City and Long Beach Port officials met at Long Beach Civic Plaza to dedicate a new bike and pedestrian path.

The new path on the Long Beach International Gateway Bridge is named after the late Mark Bixby, an avid cyclist who advocated for increased biking infrastructure in the city.

health, the impact of art enrichment opportunities and the influence counselors can have on students.

Board President Diana Craighead said Lopez's presence at board meetings has been pivotal in grounding the work of the board.

"We [now] have that student voice and so we're constantly reminded of why we do the work that we do," Craighead said.

Lopez said Long Beach was the first school district where she felt heard by her teachers and peers.

While she was still in the Los Angeles Unified School District in the fifth grade, Lopez said she experienced physical and verbal bullying from her peers, and later experienced bullying from a teacher and felt isolated by her principal.

These experiences caused her to develop depression and social anxiety, making it difficult to keep up with her academics. Lopez described it as one of the lowest points of her life.

"It made me feel like I was not important, like they didn't care about me," Lopez said.

After she transferred to LBUSD, she slowly began improving her grades thanks to the support of her teachers, and began making friends. Once she felt comfortable in her surroundings, Lopez started taking on leadership positions and flourished there as well.

"I like helping people like myself because I know that I'm not the only one experiencing what I did,"

Lopez said.

Lopez is involved in multiple leadership positions at Jordan High School. She is currently serving her second year as an ambassador for the Jordan Media and Communication (JMAC) pathway—a media arts pathway that teaches students different multimedia skills like photography and film.

Lopez also represents her school in the Schoolsite Council—a group of teachers, students, parents and administrators that overlook how schools spend federal funds.

Lopez said her drive and passion to be in leadership positions originally stemmed from her anxiety.

"Honestly, from being more involved I feel like my social anxiety finally got 'attacked' and [I'm] just nervous instead of anxious. I feel more confident with myself," Lopez said.

Jordan High School Pathway Coordinator, Valerie Gonzalez, has been privy to this growth. Gonzalez overlooks the four different linked learning pathways that Jordan High School offers.

Each LBUSD high school offers different pathways linked to a certain industry within California.

Gonzalez has been working with Lopez over the past two years.

"From last year alone, she's been able to grow into a strong representation of a Latina female in education and she's sharing her thoughts, her concerns, but also is that ear for others," Gonzalez said.

Gonzalez described Lopez as smart, driven and kind-hearted. She said Lopez has helped represent her pathway at different school-wide events, such as school site night and choice night, by presenting the opportunities JMAC offers.

After high school, Lopez plans to attend Long Beach City College and major in business administration; she said she wants to stay local as she's grown to love Long Beach.

"I'm really anxious to see what path she takes and where she ends up, because I know whatever she chooses to do, she's going to make a difference," Craighead said.

CRIME

Long Beach asks LA County to help establish $25,000 reward for information leading to justice for 12-year-old shot and killed

Samantha Diaz
Managing Editor

Long Beach is asking Los Angeles County to partner with them to create a minimum $25,000 reward for information that will lead to the arrest of the person, or persons who shot and killed 12-year-old Eric Gregory Brown III on May 9.

Eric was walking on the sidewalk along Lewis Avenue with two of his friends on Tuesday, May 9 when they were approached by a vehicle containing at least two men, according to Long Beach Police Department reports.

An unknown number of people in the vehicle opened fire on Eric, a 14-year-old girl and a 13-year-old girl, according to police reports. Police were called to the area at 11:32 p.m. and found Eric with a life-threatening gunshot wound to his upper body.

The 14-year-old girl had a gunshot wound to her lower body, and the two were taken to a local hospital. The 13-year-old girl was uninjured, police said.

Eric died at the hospital later that night. His killer has not been found yet.

"Our city, our streets, are not safe today because there's a cold-hearted killer who is on our streets," said Councilmember Al Austin at the Tuesday night city council meeting. "This type of senseless, horrific violence won't be tolerated in our city."

Long Beach is looking to its residents to come forward with information that might lead to the arrest of Eric's killer. The LA County Board of Supervisors must now approve the reward amount, and Long Beach will have the option to match the funds through private donations.

According to the Pew Research Center, gun deaths among children rose 50% from 2019 to 2021. In 2021, 2,590 children were killed by gun violence.

Typically, the information given to police must help lead to an arrest of the suspect in order for a reward to be given. Rewards for information leading to arrest have a wide variance of success in the United States.

According to Houston Public Media, some places in the U.S. only reward about 15 to 20% of its rewards, while in other places in the country the success rate is as high as 70%.

The reward is considered successful if an arrest is made and the case is closed. Rewards are meant to incentivize the public to come forward with information in the face of their possible fear or intimidation.

"These items do not feel good, but they're responsibilities we have to do to make sure our police department has the tools that they need in order to lead a successful investigation and ultimately bring those responsible for this crime to justice," Mayor Rex Richardson said.

A couple of members of Eric's family came to the city council meeting to thank the public for their support and the City for the proposed reward.

father of Eric—spoke about his grandson's aspirations, and the life he was planning for himself.

He said Eric wanted a career in STEM and talked about creating "the next mobile phone."

"Not only did the city of Long Beach lose someone, but the world lost someone," Gregory Brown Sr. said.
